False Alarm Demonstrates
Value of Training School

Just as the active members of the Bristol Consolidated Fire Department were in the midst of an intensive drill, last night, at the foot of Pond street, some individual taking a long chance of a jail sentence, turned in a false alarm from box 315, Keystone Aircraft Corporation plant.

At the time of the false alarm three crews with three pieces of apparatus and several new members just appointed as active firemen were being instructed by Lieutenant Garner, of the Philadelphia Fire School, and Chief James L. McGee. There were two pieces of apparatus in the fire station with men in charge ready to answer all alarms.

The two pieces of apparatus in the station responded at once, while the three crews in training quickly manned the apparatus they had with them, broke hose connections and also responded as the alarm struck came from what is termed "high valued building."

Much favorable comment was heard as to the manner in which the three crews in training went into active service. The action of the men proved the value of drills and systematic instruction, although it was not done for that purpose.

Test Ventilating System
Of the Grand Theatre

The Grand Theatre has put into operation its complete ventilating system so as to make "The Playhouse Beautiful" a place of comfort during the warm summer weather. The system was given a thorough try-out last Saturday when it was operated at full capacity for the first time. The trial was very successful.

"Two hundred thousand cubic feet of air is changed every two minutes," explained Edward Lynn, the manager.

Directly above the dome in the main auditorium is a large room 20x20 feet, housing four seven-foot induction fans. These fans are driven by two 10 h. p. motors and lead into four large grills which are a part of the dome forming large groups of stars. In the lightway between the office buildings and the theatre there is another fresh air duct 14 feet long, and two feet wide leading into the foyer and into the cellar.

If the air in the theatre becomes foul, fresh air can be supplied when required. The fresh air can be mixed with recirculating air, or fresh air can be used entirely. If at any time the induction fans at the top of the theatre are running and the blower fans in the cellar are put in action, all the air in the theatre could be changed in one minute.

This system being reversible, it may also be used for exhausting and ventilating purposes, providing comfort for the patrons in all seasons of the year.

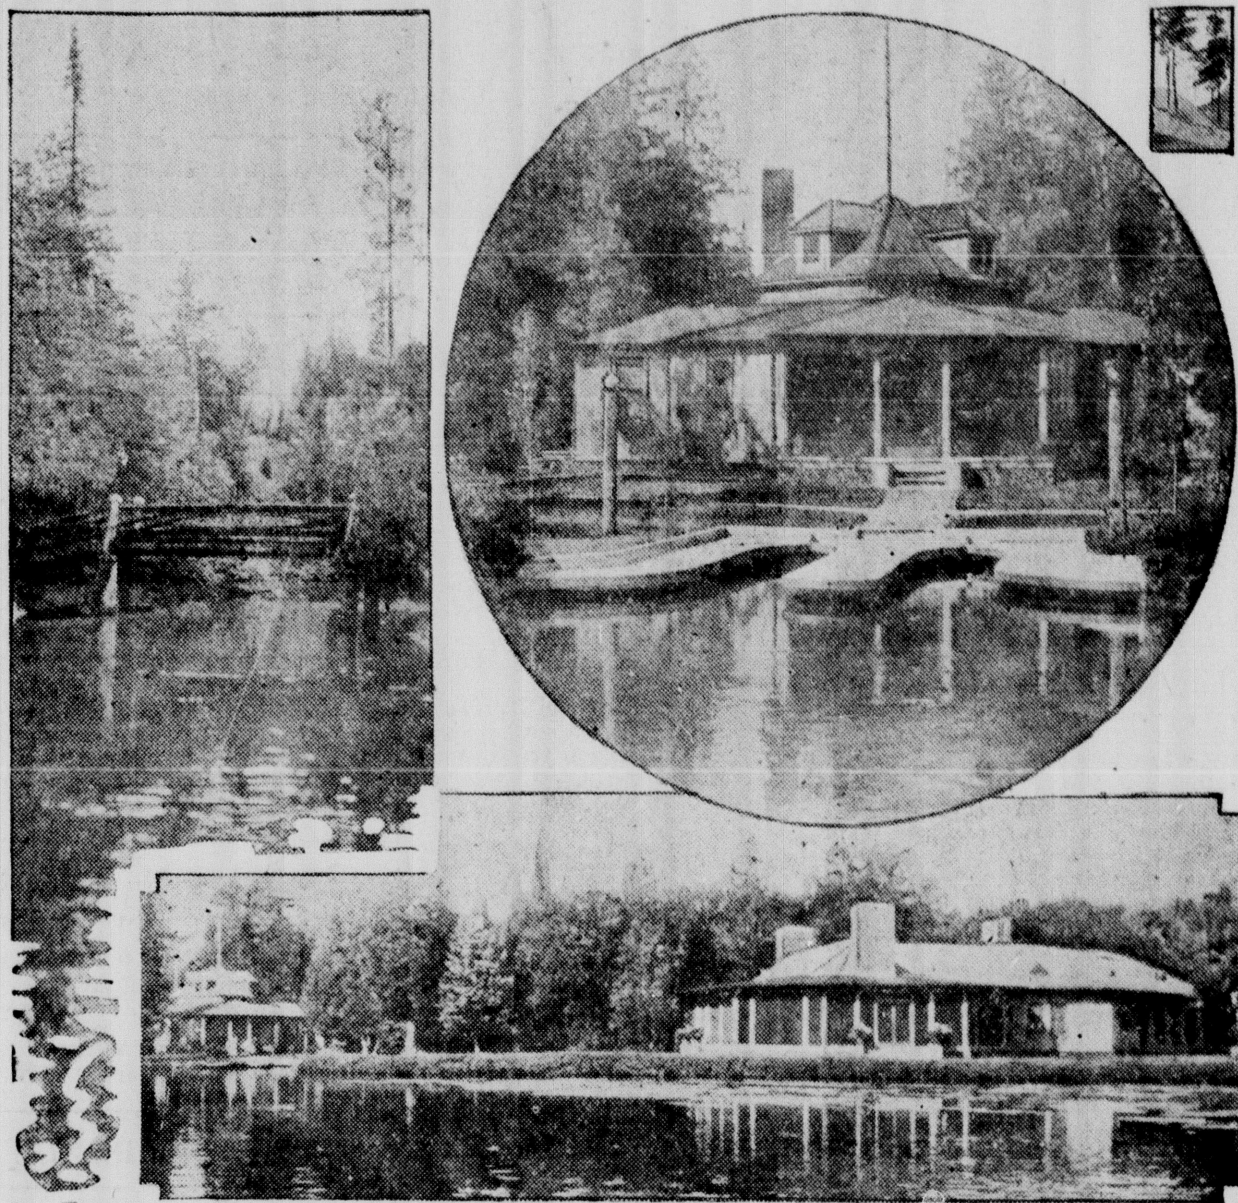

The fresh air also circulates through what are known as "mushrooms" in the floor of the theatre. Mr. Lynn says that the theatre can be kept 15 degrees cooler than the outside temperature when necessary. There are no draughts and perfect comfort is enjoyed in the playhouse.

DOYLESTOWN MAY GET NEW FREE LIBRARY

For Purpose Have Increased

NO STATEMENT YET

DOYLESTOWN, June 5.—The proceeds of that part of the estate of Charles C. Cox who died here on May 29, 1914, and in his will provided for the Melinda Cox Free Library that has been in operation for some years on East State street, will amount to over $40,000 when the final settlement is announced and after certain securities in the possession of a local banking institution will have been converted.

The bequest of approximately $30,000 left by the late Mr. Cox has grown in value during the past fourteen years through investments made by the late Judge Harman Yerkes, executor of the Cox estate, over $10,000. Not counting the profits that will be realized through converting certain securities in the possession of the bank, the total amount shown in a statement of accounts of the Doylestown Trust Company, executor of the will of Harman Yerkes, deceased, who was executor of the will of Charles C. Cox, deceased, is $39,986.07.

Considerable discussion has been heard of late as to the future of the Melinda Cox Free Library, whether a new library building will be procured and what location might be selected. The board of managers including, according to the will of the late Mr. Cox, to be the president judge of the courts of the county, the pastor of the First Baptist Church and the Presbyterian Church, have made no comment on the proposed future plans but have intimated that after the complete final settlement of accounts has been made, there will be announcements of interest to make.

At the end of the evening the guests were invited to the dining room, where an elaborate repast was served, the table decorations being in white, and favors miniature brides.

At the table, the guests were treated to a surprise when the hostess, Miss Marion Hellings, announced her engagement to Mr. Edward J. Fleming, son of Mr. and Mrs. T. Herman Fleming, of Andalusia.

TULLYTOWN WOMAN ADDS INTERESTING BIT TO PROGRAM ON THE DELAWARE'S ROMANCE

Quotes John Faris in Delightful Book on "The Romance of Old Philadelphia" as That City is Spoken of In Connection With the Stream

Mrs. H. H. Burton, of Tullytown, has outlined in a most instructive manner a paper upon "Philadelphia." The paragraphs, which follow were read by the Tullytown resident at the time the Bristol Travel Club presented the program, "The Romance of the Delaware," at Doylestown:

We all know the Philadelphia of today. It has so large a place in our scheme of life. It is our place of business, the place where we often go shopping by day or seek amusement in the evening. It is a city of a hundred thousand homes, thousands of factories, many banks, schools, the city by the river with its great bridge, its many docks, its ships which trade with the world.

The city regional planning commission is now laying out a great metropolitan area of and around Philadelphia. The idea being to allot to each of the many interests special land sections. We may look to the future of Philadelphia with full imagination.

But to me the old Philadelphia is the more romantic part and is in direct keeping with our topic of today, so we will dwell upon that. I wish to tell you about the people of old Philadelphia—how they lived, a few of their customs and habits. The extracts which I shall read to you are taken from the diaries of those who lived during this early period as collected by John Faris in his most delightful book, "The Romance of Old Philadelphia."

It is interesting to read of the women housekeepers of that day.

Page 59.—"The women who were at the head of old Philadelphia homes were usually good housewives, whether they presided over a little brick tenement like that in Mulberry street, which Ann Newell entered in 1745 and for which she paid four pounds per year, or over such a house as that Ann Warder described in 1788 as 'exceedingly convenient, though larger than I wished, it having four rooms on a floor,—kitchen, counting house and two parlors on the first floor, eight bedrooms and two garrets. Many handy closets. A small yard and beyond it another with grass plot, good stable and chaise house.'

"For in that day more attention was paid to educating a girl in housework and home-making than in the studies of the schools. It was considered of greater value that she should know how to spin, knit, sew and cook than that she should be familiar with literature or be able to scan a line of Latin verse. The average mother took great pride in having her floors spotless, in making the clothing of her children as well as for her husband, and in collecting china, brass, pewter, or possibly silver for her pantry shelves."

The housewives of old Philadelphia were proud to carry their home-dyed home-spun to the fairs and markets, which were popular meeting places.

You may be interested in hearing the kind of dinners the prosperous folk ate.

Page 63.—"Dined with Anne Giles, daughter to Friend Clifford, her father and mother, with Tommy, John and wife, and brother and sister Warder. First rock fish, next mockturtle, ducks, ham and boiled turkey, with plenty of vegetables, and after these were removed, we had floating island, several kinds of pie with oranges and preserves. When we were all satisfied, left the men to their pipes and went upstairs to our chat."

Two days later the diarist wrote:

"Most of the family busy preparing for a great dinner, two green turtles having been sent . . . We concluded to dress them together here and invite the whole family in . . . We had a black woman to cook and an elegant entertainment it was—having three tureens of soup, the two shells baked besides several dishes of stew, with boned turkey, roast ducks, veal and beef. After these were served the table was filled with two kinds of jellies and various kinds of puddings, pie and preserves; and then almonds, raisins, nuts, apples and oranges. Twenty-four sat down at the table. I admired the activity of the luscious cook, who prepared everything herself, and charged for a day and a half but three dollars."

Page 64.—"Another cherished custom peculiar to Philadelphia was the washing of the pavements before the doorway every Saturday evening. I at first took this to be a regulation of the police, but, on further enquiry, find it to be a religious rite preparatory to the Sabbath, and is, I believe, the only religious rite in which the numerous sectarians of the city profoundly agree."

"The ceremony begins about sunset, and continues till about ten or eleven at night. It is every difficult for a stranger to walk the streets on these evenings. He runs a continual risk of having a bucket of water thrown against his legs, but a Philadelphia born is so accustomed to the danger that he avoids it with surprising dexterity. It is from this circumstance

SABBATH MADNESS

The Sabbath, once the day of rest, is now fast becoming known as the day of eternal rest. For more people now go to an untimely death on that day than any other day of the week. Mad motoring is responsible for this ghastly change.

The Sabbath was made for man, to be sure, but not for the exercise to his uttermost folly. Yet as surely as Monday rolls around we have the gruesome front page news of the dead, the dying and the injured who have apparently gone mad over Sunday and have paid the price.

This is not the full extent of the bad uses to which we are putting the Sabbath day, although they are the most spectacular. Add to this list the jangled nerves of many a good wife, the tired body of many a husband, the unnatural stimulation of many children of the families that rise early and start out on a quest of distance.

Fast and furious driving is likely to mark such a trip with many near accidents. The mind, body and soul undergoes almost every experience and emotion except those of rest and repose and recreation. Then the homeward journey and the sleep of exhaustion or, what is more likely, the sleeplessness of exhausted nerves.

The pendulum swings from extreme to extreme. The deathlike silence and stupor of the Sabbath of the past is gone and probably gone forever. But the deathly clamor of our Twentieth Century Sabbath is equally impossible. Wise motorists avoid Sunday travel as much as possible, or seek byways and unfrequented places. Or, what is best of all, use the car to take them a relatively short distance to a spot where they may make the most of the day in the rest and recreation of body and spirit which alone justify the Sabbath.

UNFOUNDED CRITICISM

A commentator hits an inviting mark when he says that much of the literary criticism now going the rounds is unworthy of acceptance as the last word of judgment on works with which it deals. Sound, healthy criticism is now, as it always has been, worthy of serious consideration by readers. But criticism, like literature and art, is prone to run after strange ideas and to overemphasize the value of novelities and to develop neurotic and decadent tendencies.

It is a fair coat against many modern critics that they overrate ugliness as realism and set too high value on the morbid and the distorted, to which certain writers run. When a long-haired critic reviews the works of a long-haired author, the result is not apt to be long in value. In this time of faddism critics owe it to their public to keep level heads and, as far as they are able, to hold against the ugly tendencies that are showing in too many so-called literary products.

Heads may be some thicker out in the sticks; but the milk is also.

Dolores Costello in "OLD SAN FRANCISCO" is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Buckwell, San Francisco's boss politician, with lawyer, Brandon, attempted to get possession of Vasquez ranch, occupied by Vasquez and his beautiful granddaughter Dolores. Their plot is discovered by Terry, Brandon's nephew, who loves Dolores. Terry and Dolores have a misunderstanding. Dolores falls into Buckwell's clutches but is saved by Terry. Buckwell uses force to oust Vasquez, but is defeated. He tries to kill Terry, but Vasquez heads Terry's warning and confronts Buckwell. The aged Spaniard dies from stroke caused by Buckwell's threats. Dolores, left alone, discovers that Buckwell is Chinaman in disguise. She plans to avenge her grandfather's death. Tells Terry, Buckwell is Chinaman.

"And that would be a crime!" he objected quickly. "Your plot is too splendid to be covered. No, on second thought, I love you most without anything to cover your hair." But the look in his eyes indicated that if she wore a matted sunbonnet he would love her just the same.

Dolores was slightly abashed by such ardent admiration, although she found herself wanting him to say loverlike words and hold her hand forever. Nothing else could keep back the sobs and bring momentary forgetfulness of the fact that her grandfather was dead.

"The Chinamen we are going to see," asked Dolores curiously, "what will they do to Senor Buckwell?"

"I don't know just what, but they will make it pretty uncomfortable for him. In fact, it will be the last of Buckwell as a power in Frisco."

"It should be! He can't take the ranch away from us now, can he?" It was a new and hopeful thought.

"There is nothing he can't do unless he is locked up and under guard, and we know that he is trying to have the old Spanish grants declared invalid. By the way, I have not had a chance to tell you—my uncle is no longer doing Buckwell's legal work." There was a ring of pride in Terry's voice.

"Oh, Terry, I am glad," cried Dolores impulsively, more for his sake than her own, because she knew what a heartache the combine had been to him. "What made him give it up?"

Her eyes searched his so trustingly that he could not lie. "Why—why, I told about what a rotter Buckwell had been to you, and uncle also found out that Buckwell had double crossed him on a deal, so he said he was 'through.' I hope he meant it. I believe he did."

Again they rode on in silence.

"You seem so far away," complained Terry from his corner of the carriage, "may I come nearer?"

Dolores was elusively desirable, and he was fearful of startling her. "Yes—you may," she replied so faintly that if he had not already moved nearer he could not have heard.

She was uncomfortably happy. There is such a state when one is in love. She had never wanted Don Luis to even kiss her finger tips. She hated to have him call her "sweet Senorita," and he always did! She dreaded being left alone with him, and his sentimental flattery annoyed her. But with Terry it was different. She craved his touch and drank in his every word and gesture. She liked everything he did and said, and after they avenged her grandfather's death she would ask nothing more from life than to be with him.

It was what Terry wanted, too, and as the carriage drew into the radiance of San Francisco's lights he asked earnestly, "Dolores, when will you marry me?" then he hastened to add before she had time to answer, "Don't say later than a month or I can't stand it. I want you for my very own, dear—soon!"

"And I want you to have me!" replied Dolores. Their eyes melted into each other's. "I could not have lived through the last few days if it had not been for you."

"God bless you, my darling. But when will you marry me?"

"Almost any time, Terry. I don't think it would be disrespectful to grandfather's memory. It is so lonely at the rancho alone, and if Senor Buckwell takes it away from me I wouldn't know what to do."

"Look here!" commanded Terry with a fine show of sternness, "are you going to marry me just for the sake of having a roof over your head?"

"You know I am not," replied Dolores with dignity. "I am going to marry you because—I love you."

And she looked at him with such an adorably sweet expression that he wanted to catch her in his arms and never let her go.

"That is the first time you have said it, sweetheart! Glory, but it sounds great!"

At this point in their conversation they drew up to the entrance of Lu Fong's Cafe. Their quest for the head of the inner circle had led them to the threshold of as dangerously famous a haunt as existed within the Golden Gate.

"Wait until we return," Terry instructed the driver.

They entered the dimly lighted cafe.

Dolores appeared as out of place as an exquisite orchid in a rank weed patch. She instinctively recoiled. Terry took her arm reassuringly.

"Don't worry, dear; we will not have to stay here long. Lu Fong has an office some place in the building. I will find out how we get to him."

Still holding her protectively by the arm, Terry beckoned to a waiter. As the white aproned servant approached Terry said, "We must see Lu Fong at once; it is important."

The waiter stuck his shiny black tray under his arm and eyed Dolores with interest. "I'll pass on the word. I don't know much about the inner workings of the place myself. Take a seat while you're waiting!" and, indicating a small table near the doorway, he went out whistling.

Dolores looked slowly around the enormous cafe room. It was filled with a crowd representing almost every nationality and every walk of life. Some had come because it was a habit, others out of curiosity. The cafe was a good place in which to indulge one's appetites, no matter of what nature they chanced to be. Chinese waiters were scurrying about serving food.

One side of the room was lined with partially secluded booths, from which issued either no sound at all or a volume of voices. The opposite wall was backed with French plate mirrors and an elaborate rosewood bar. It was without a doubt the most active section of the entire room. Although Lu Fong's was a Chinese cafe, tea was seldom ordered. Plain American beer and whisky were the popular beverages, and they were served in great profusion. Whisky was bought by the barrel and was a tremendous source of graft for some of the white bosses.

The cafe bar was a room of many doors. To all who gave the matter their consideration it was easily observed that one door never opened into the room. It was an exit only, but bore no label. What happened to the people who crossed its threshold at rare intervals was a source of much speculation. Those who came out, by another exit, never told of their experiences, while still others never reappeared to give an account of themselves. It led to a certain back room and from thence down, down into the maze of underground passages where one was as lost as in the labyrinth of Corinth without a guide.

Singing entertainers, both men and women, worked their way through the aisles or paused at a table now and then to help along the general hilarity of the evening, which had not yet reached its height.

Dolores shuddered and turned away as she saw a young white girl having dinner with an apparently wealthy Chinese merchant. There was a lustful gleam in the man's eyes, and the girl put her hand in his with a significant look and caloused laugh that meant their evening together was just beginning.

It reminded Dolores of her encounter with Buckwell, and she wondered how any girl could endure the society of a Chinaman. Her three awakenings her mind to life as it was lived by people who did not care or whose ideals were of an entirely different calibre were of her own.

Looking away from the ill suited couple, Dolores noticed a man—all alone at a neighboring table. He was laughing and going through the motions of making an imaginary something—animal perhaps—sit up and jump over his finger. She wondered why his face should be so white and pinched.

TULLYTOWN TROUNCES TRENTON TYPEWRITERS

With an elegant calibre of support from his team-mates, "Bill" Fine pitched his Tullytown team to a glorious victory at Tullytown on Sunday afternoon, smothering their opponents, the Prior Typewriter Exchange team, of Trenton, N. J., by the score of 16 to 3.

Hellings and Afflerbach knocked out a three-bagger apiece, which brought in a couple of runs each time.

Fine's clutch for a home run in the third brought two in ahead of him, and with the biggest hit ever made on the Tullytown field, which hit the paper mill building, he again made a homer in the sixth, once more bringing in two ahead of him.

Riola topped the list of swatters with four to his credit.

In the seventh inning, with Fine's team batting, the third pitcher was yanked from the box and the Prior team's manager went in the box himself, striking out the first man, the second flying, and striking out the third.

Dunk, of Morrisville, officiated as umpire in a very capable and unbiased manner.

RIVERSIDE THEATRE

Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky, lovers in three films, come to the Riverside Theatre, tonight, in "The Night of Love," Samuel Goldwyn's presentation of George Fitzmaurice's production of a tale based on the feudal "right to the first night." Colman appears in an entirely new character for him, that of a bold gypsy bandit, a tousel-haired fellow with pointed moustaches and lengthened "side burns." Vilma plays the role of a beautiful Duchess, victim of the fearful "right to the first night."

From Lenore Coffee's scenario, George Fitzmaurice made "The Night of Love" in Hollywood, occupying six months of time and employing nearly $900,000 of money in the picturization of the romantic tale of the sixteenth century. The entire film was under the personal supervision of Samuel Goldwyn, veteran producer of "Stella Dallas," "The Winning of Barbara Worth," "The Dark Angel" and other handsome and dramatic films.

GRAND THEATRE

One of the world's simplest, and most appealing love stories has required one of the most elaborate settings ever built to transfer it to the screen.

This is the paradox of "The Student Prince," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's huge filmization of the famous old play, in which Ramon Novarro and Norma Shearer were directed by Ernst Lubitsch, and which came to the Grand Theatre Monday for a three-day run.

With their love as the central theme, a cast of thirty-five famous players and several thousand extras were necessary to reproduce the famous old story, immortalized on the stage by Richard Mansfield and recently revived in musical form as "The Student Prince."

Whole towns were built; great castles in Germany reproduced, and the University of Heidelberg recreated in wood and plaster for the huge production. In one scene, showing the welcome of the townspeople to the young prince, played by Novarro, two thousand villagers, guardsmen, police and other characters appear in a gigantic setting depicting a public square and covering ten acres.

The coronation ceremonies required hundreds of soldiers in the brilliant uniforms of the imperial guard, diplomats and nobles; five hundred gaily attired students reveled in the Heidelberg garden scenes, the majestic Heidelberg Castle was recreated, inside and out, and other huge construction tasks marked the filming of the new super-spectacle.

that a Philadelphian is known anywhere by his gait."

Among the records of business and professional life in the city some of the most curious are the bills of physicians.

Page 100.—One of these, dated 1717, and made out by Doctor Jones to John Russell, was remarkable for the fact that all the charges were for cures.

There were eight of the charges, some of them being: "To curing his servant's knee, £1;" "To curing his man's foot, 4 shillings;" "To curing his daughter's foot, 3 shillings;" "To curing his son's sore eye, 3 shillings."

Surely no man could object to paying a bill like that!

In this age of whirling motors it is curious to note that in 1697, 14 years after the founding of Philadelphia, it was a matter of local pride that there were "thirty carts and other wheeled vehicles" in town. The usual travel to the outside being made on horse-back or afoot.

In 1704 a progressive step in transportation was taken when Lord Cornbury granted to John Reeve the privilege of keeping a ferry between Philadelphia and Burlington, N. J. However, the ferry provided was "an open boat without sails, giving neither comfort nor convenience to its patrons."

When the revolution came the city was the natural centre of the colonies, the keystone of the arch. Here Morris and the other great bankers lived. The State House was the most imposing building in the entire 13 colonies. Cannon could be cast only at Valley Forge. The secret of gun powder making was held here. Franklin had established the postoffice. The first Continental Congress met in Carpenters Hall. The Declaration of Independence was signed here in 1776. The Federal Constitutional Convention met in Philadelphia.

For 70 years or until the close of the revolutionary era Philadelphia was first in population in trade, in position, in influence, and was in many ways the only "city" of which the new world could boast. Its streets were paved, it had sidewalks and street lamps, which could not be said of its sister cities.

Throughout the land the city is looked upon as a national possession, and it will always have a peculiar place in the affections, not only of its own people, but also of millions, many of whom perhaps will never enter its borders.
